

Deborah Franzman, Sociology Professor, Memorial Scholarship

Deborah Franzman was a sociology professor dedicated to making the world a better place. She deeply believed in equality for all cultures and gender. Debbie taught by example zestfully living a life of tolerance, passion, empathy, accountability, and service. She was dedicated to staying mentally and physically fit reading and learning throughout her life, as well as being a disciplined athlete. Debbie paid attention and gathered lessons from all aspects of her life including open water ocean swimming about which she once wrote:

“Sometimes it takes a big wave to push us to go beyond the wave. Once we get there, it is calm and peaceful and full of energy. Only those who get there understand that life is all that you make it. The wave that takes us out to this place is strong, filled with sand with no intention at all. We are the target but the wave doesn't know this. It is our own doing that puts us in the way of the wave.” -Deborah Franzman-

In honoring Debbie's life it is our intention to award $500.00 to a student who is similarly dedicated to making the world a better place. This scholarship is open to students who are on track to graduate from Lopez High School this school year and intend on furthering their education beyond high school. Please complete the following application, including an essay explaining your educational and personal goals, previous or planned community service and interaction with society, as well as how this scholarship might assist you.

Completed applications with essay are to be postmarked no later than April 15, 2009 & returned to:
